INTRODUCTION

I. THE CONTENTS OF THE CONCORDANCE

The concordance is based on the "Globe" edition of Chaucer's works,* with its text and line-numbering in both verse and prose. This was used, rather than one of Professor Skeat's, the only other complete editions in the present generation, because its text is rather more conservative, and in some parts is based on a larger number of MSS. With every practicable effort to include every word which

Textual Chaucer used, that the concordance may be the less likely to become obsolete after the publication of other texts, this is then emphatically a concordance to the Globe edition and not a complete new study of the text; and in general accepts the Globe edition as it is, and assumes no rigid responsibility for anything which is not in it. This fact has had some ill results. First, the four Globe editors avowedly waived uniformity in certain minor matters. No attempt has been made here to standardize such things as prevalent spellings or the use of apostrophes; though in a large number of passages i and u have been normalized as vowels, and j and v as consonants. Secondly, hundreds of small but undeniable mistakes have been found, and doubtless many others have been overlooked. Most of these mistakes are clear misprints or strikingly incorrect forms which are not justified by the MS or MSS mentioned as his basis by the editor involved. Almost all of those found have been silently corrected, after consulting the published MSS, or the facsimile of the Ellesmere MS or of Thynne's edition; a few of the most important corrections, as noted below, are indicated by square brackets; very rarely the punctuation has been slightly changed. There has been no attempt to catch all such errors, but merely those (probably the majority) have been corrected which have forced themselves on attention. Many little errors in the texts of the MSS printed by the Chaucer Society (there are many in its Ellesmere text) must have passed into the concordance as into the editions. The greatest number of errors are in the Canterbury Tales, the Legend of Good Women and the Boethius. This last case is particularly regrettable, for the editor of the Boethius offers "a critical text made from all the known MSS;" for which reason the present editors have felt less at liberty to make alterations even of spelling. Since this is a concordance to the Globe edition, the Globe reading has always been allowed to stand, if clearly and with full information intended, and what may seem to some a preferable reading is given as a variant. Very rarely a [sic] indicates what seemed a dubious reading or emendation. Even a misplaced line-number (210) in the Parson's Tale is left unchanged in order not to confuse the searcher. But four passages in the prose (B. Mel. 2252-3,† 2623-4, 2854, Bo. 2. p. 2. 310), put in by the Globe editors without MS authority in order to fill out the sense, have been entirely rejected. Such insertions or errors in the edition must not be supposed, of course, fatally to mar its reliability or value.

All works contained in the Globe edition have been included, and no others. This means all works

* The Works of Geoffrey Chaucer, edited by Alfred W. Pollard, H. Frank Heath, Mark H. Liddell, W. S. McCormick; Macmillan and Co., 1913 (originally issued in 1898).

† The status of this passage is indicated in the Globe edition so ambiguously that it was not noticed till the proof was being read, too late to remove from the concordance four of the numerous lines involved. These (two under Counsel, one each under Can and Furthermore) are noted among the Corrigenda; which also note the more important of the other slight errors found too late to be corrected in all the entries involved. The above passage seems to have been inserted on a false supposition. Passages really essential to sense and continuity may fairly be presumed to have once been present in an original work, but not necessarily in a translation of it.

contained in Skeat's six-volume edition* except the last two of the three lyrics which he printed at the beginning of his fourth volume; these two, which he entitled Complaint to my Mortal Foe and Complaint to my Lode-sterre, are disregarded as showing no particular evidence of authenticity, less even than the Balade of Complaynt. The first of the three, which he called Womanly Noblesse and Included the Globe editor Balade that Chaucier Made, they seem to have been justified in including.

Certain later sections in the Astrolabe, marked by Skeat "Supplementary Propositions," are not in the Globe edition and are disregarded here. The chief question was as to the translation of Le Roman de la Rose, but was not difficult to decide. This could not be wholly omitted, and there was no satisfactory alternative short of wholly including it. It may seem odd to print words from its certainly non-Chaucerian portions among Chaucer's words, but the inclusion suggestively exhibits the likenesses and unlikenesses of the two vocabularies. Students of Chaucer are aware of the spuriousness of at least the middle part of the work and the doubt as to any of it, and other readers are sufficiently warned by the title-page and this introduction. They may learn further facts from works cited in Miss E. P. Hammond's Chaucer: A Bibliographical Manual (1908), J. E. Wells' Manual of the Writings in Middle English, 1050-1400 (1916), and D. D. Griffith's Bibliography of Chaucer, 1908-1924 (Univ. of Washington Press, 1926), and from the introductions to the Globe and Skeat editions.

In spite of the position of the Globe edition as basis of the concordance, certain probably genuine passages omitted from its text are fully recorded. These are Prol. 252a-252b (taken from the Hengwrt MS), WBP. 44a-44f (from Skeat's larger edition), Cl. T. 1212a-1212g (the so-called Host-stanza, from the Ellesmere MS), and TC. 2, 1750a-1750g (from MS Rawlinson Poet. 163).† They are numbered as Additional above. An additional passage in the Astrolabe, 25-32, taken from Thynne's first edition Passages and marked "var Th" in each quotation, is very likely not genuine. One or two other additional passages included (B. NP. 4060 a-b) are probably not genuine.‡

The variant readings, numbering about twenty-five hundred, are distinguished by var. This means simply variants from the Globe edition (as is stated above), even when that has an emendation and even when the present editors think the MS-reading preferable. The aim has been to record all variants of importance which an editor might choose for a text. Many of them the present editors Variant would never consider. They include all sorts, from readings certainly right to readings Readings almost certainly wrong, the latter especially in passages with many readings but none satisfactory. Variants have especially been recorded where the Globe reading is ill-supported by the authorities and the well-supported reading is acceptable; e.g., Pight, ABC. 163, Reufulles[t], PF. 613, Scour, I. Pars. 670-5. There has also been a tendency to include readings, even if probably wrong, where fairly numerous authorities are practically unanimous; also substitutions of like words which involve a different prefix or suffix, or Norse for Anglo-Saxon origin, Latin for French, etc.; and sometimes to include good readings which make impossible verse, on the chance that something else in the line is wrong, and good readings which change the number of syllables. For possibly or certainly genuine passages (not marked var) omitted in the Globe, see the preceding paragraph. The fact has been considered that variants may be of two kinds; there may be only one correct reading, or there may have been author's revision. The intention has been to include all important variants in the "G"-prolog of the Legend of Good Women, even the same words in corresponding passages if there is significant alteration of some sort. Variants from this version are marked G., not var. After line 374 the passage is taken from the Chaucer Society reprint of the MS, since after that point the Globe editor does not print the G-text in full. There has been some discrimination against the early printed editions (as being late texts); and also against MS Harl. 7334, owing to the conviction that it contains tinkering by another than Chaucer, though this fact is somewhat offset by its earliness. Mere different spellings or different tenses, numbers, etc., of the same word are ordinarily disregarded, and such variations as Lyte-Lytel, Nil-Wil, Oure self or Us self, etc.; usually also, where a considerable number of MSS are available, less important variants found in but one; also, usually, variants involving merely the order of words. The prose works and the Romaunt of the Rose have been drawn on less than other works. An edition will naturally in its notes take account of far more and smaller variants than a concordance; to have let down the bars further would have inevitably multiplied the variants many-fold. That only about twenty-five hundred of them are given is due to a desire not to overload with trifling alternatives or corrupt readings; and also to the relatively reliable character of Chaucer's

* His smaller Student's Chaucer contains all the works recognized by the concordance, and no others.

† As given by Sir W. S. McCormick in An English Miscellany presented to Dr. Furnivall (1901), p. 297, and by Professor Root in his two books mentioned below.

‡ The several made-over and spurious prologs and epilogs in the Canterbury Tales of course are disregarded. These are probably hack-work done in the scriptoria for commercial reasons, to fill in gaps, or to make adjustments for a changed order of the tales, that ill-informed purchasers might not fancy they were getting damaged copies.

text. The editors feel more than ever that on the whole Chaucer's text is in good condition, probably as good as that of any other important medieval author except Dante, and much better than Shakespeare's.

The variant readings are selected from all significant available collections of readings; from the textual notes in the Globe edition, Skeat's six-volume edition, Dr. John Koch's Geoffrey Chaucer's Canterbury Tales (Heidelberg, 1915), from Koch's review of the Globe edition (Englische Studien, XXVII. 1-61), Miss E. P.

Sources of the Variant Readings Hammond's Text of Chaucer's Parlement of Foules (in Decennial Publications of the University of Chicago, VII. 3-25), Dr. R. K. Root's list of errata in the Chaucer Society's texts of the Troilus MSS (in his Textual Tradition of Chaucer's Troilus, pp. 273-7), Flügel's New Collation of the Ellesmere MS (Anglia, XXX. 401-12). Frequently the Ellesmere and Thynne facsimiles were referred to, and were used (as already remarked) to correct errors in the Chaucer Society reprints. For a considerable number of passages in the Canterbury Tales collations of most of the extant MSS have been used which were made by one of the present editors some years ago. Further, all the variants were sent for comparison to Professor F. N. Robinson, who kindly allowed Dr. P. F. Baum to extract for the present purpose many variants from his forthcoming edition of Chaucer's works. Professor R. K. Root kindly supplemented the variants for the Troilus from the textual notes of his edition,* which has since appeared, based on study of all the MSS and the successive revisions which he finds indicated. Finally, the variants for the Canterbury Tales have been compared with the collations made by the late George Stevenson and President H. N. MacCracken, who about the years 1905-1914 collated some thousand variable and crucial passages with nearly all the extant MSS of the Tales. From these collations, through the kindness of Dr. J. T. T. Brown, one of the editors was enabled to take some scores of variants. In consequence of the two last-mentioned comparisons, for three-quarters of Chaucer's poetry the concordance contains the most important variants from practically all existing MSS. For the remaining quarter of the poetry the MSS are nearly all in print already (for most of it they are few), and therefore have been scrutinized for variants by somebody. As to the other three works, Professor Liddell's text of the Boethius in the Globe edition also is based on all the known MSS (as was mentioned above), the text of the Astrolabe on most of them, and that of the Romaunt of the Rose on both extant texts. Finally the obvious warning must be given that there has been little means of controlling readings which no editor or critic has thought good enough to mention in his notes, even if some editor (not one of the Globe editors) has used them in his text. There can hardly be many such that are important.

A variant with its whole line is usually taken from the authority which gives the best sense and verse. When only the variant word or two was available, the context, from the Globe edition, is enclosed in square brackets. Such cases cannot be confused with the few cases where the Globe editors enclose a Method of Presenting Variant Readings word or two in brackets; or with the very rare cases where the present editors have used brackets to alter slightly a reading of the edition or of an accessible authority, when the change consists in substituting one word for another; none of these cases, of course, is marked var. The variant lines are printed as nearly diplomatically as was practicable, but obsolete letters have been modernized. The authority for a variant is not mentioned when it is easily accessible, as in a publication of the Chaucer Society; otherwise the MS or other text is indicated after the line-number by an abbreviation, which is interpreted in the list of abbreviations below.

As to titles, headings, rubrics, incipits, explicits, etc., the Globe editors have been followed where they had MS authority, not always with any conviction that Chaucer wrote the form given, and with the omission of what Chaucer could not possibly have written (e.g., after the Cook's Tale). The edition has occasionally been corrected by the MSS, and one or two other headings, etc., have even Extra-Textual Features been added for the sake of uniformity. Variants are practically never given. As to glosses and marginalia, the Globe editors had to be followed in omitting almost all of them; many of the Latin quotations are probably due to Chaucer himself, but most are not original writing of his. Anyone who wishes to consider all of Chaucer's non-English vocabulary and all the extra-textual features will have recourse to the MSS. The task of tracing and appraising the extra-textual features was undertaken by a student as a dissertation, which was stopped by the war.

There are upwards of three hundred emendations in the Globe text, seventy per cent of them in the Romaunt of the Rose. The concordance indicates them by em after the line-number. This includes all that the Globe editors designate in their textual notes or by square brackets, except some trifling changes in the mere form of a word, and certain longer passages supplied by them without authority, which (as already stated) are disregarded in the concordance. It so happens that, unknown to them, a few of their emended readings exist in unpublished MSS; it is believed that all such cases as have been found have been so indicated.

II. METHOD AND TREATMENT

The chief question as to arrangement was whether to spell the head-words in a medieval or the modern way. After thorough experiment the former proved to be unwise. A Middle English dictionary might adopt the oldest Middle English form, but a Chaucer concordance could not. No standard Chaucerian spelling exists, or can be devised without a somewhat high-handed procedure; which doubtless would be necessary in a Chaucer dictionary or glossary, but can hardly be Arrangement and Head-words thought to be so in a concordance. The great delay involved by such an arrangement, and the enormously increased bulk of cross-references, were also considerable arguments. The modern spelling in a concordance is about as good for the linguistic student and much better for the general reader. The policy is therefore to use modern spelling for the head-words which are not obsolete, with cross-references when necessary. But no distinction is made between the possessive and the nominative plural, unless they are differently spelled; i.e., the apostrophe is not here used.

As to other matters of arrangement, with proper names the policy is the same as with other words; the form familiar to-day, if there is such, is used in the head-word. But a Latin form or ending is usually regarded as constituting a different word from a Romance or English form. Latin head-words are spelt in the classical way, and French in the modern. Cases where the -est ending of the verb is combined with the pronoun (-estow) are put under the -est form. Under the -eth form is put the contracted form of the third person singular of the present indicative (with a cross-reference from the contraction); excepting for the verbs Lest and List, where the forms are sometimes difficult to identify with certainty, and for possible cases under the verb Let in an exhortation or the like. These contracted forms are often difficult to distinguish from weak preterits. Under the -eth form also of course is put the plural imperative in -eth, but if a possible contraction of this form is the same as the singular form (e.g., Trust) it is left there, owing to the difficulty of deciding whether it is plural or singular. The y- prefix is disregarded in alphabetizing the past participle, but not in other cases. Words of like meaning but different suffixes are treated as separate words. Dialectal forms when unmistakably used for "local color" are listed separately, with a cross-reference. A curious difficulty sometimes arose with verbs of which the subject is Men. Sometimes this word takes a singular verb, oftener a plural; but at times the verb-form is ambiguous. In very numerous cases it is difficult to decide as to the identity of a grammatical form, as with some present and preterit forms, and the context helps but little because of Chaucer's habit of shifting tenses; in not a few other cases two or more words which logically should be separated are so difficult to distinguish that competent judges might not agree. Such issues have sometimes frankly been evaded, and the forms left together. A dictionary can make difficult distinctions because it can omit ambiguous cases, but a concordance cannot. Words have been put together which might well have been separated rather than run the risk of putting something in the wrong place. If such doubtful forms are separated, warning is given by cross-references.

In the arrangement no doubt occasionally there are inconsistencies. Frequent difficulties were due to the attempt to reconcile theoretical and practical considerations, and to give their due weight to the convenience of the specialist and of the more or less general reader. In deciding on the treatment of a word consideration had to be given to its frequency, its relation in one way or another to other words, questions of synonym and homonym, what had been done in analogous cases, generally accepted views as to Chaucerian grammar, and at the same time the form of a word in the text. Sometimes the logical thing to do is misleading and inconvenient for everybody, and sometimes the convenient thing is unscientific.

The usual practice of concordances is followed in alphabetizing homonyms together, whether cognate or not. But when one of two homonyms is given in full and the other only by specimens, they are separated. In a very few other cases, of voluminous words and for special reasons, homonyms are separated; Have, auxiliary and full verb, in its various forms, and Might, noun and verb (both Have and Homonyms Might being represented only by specimens); Sin, noun or verb, and adverb or conjunction or preposition; Will, noun and verb. The headings indicate the separation. Foreign words are separated so far as possible from English homonyms, but it is difficult at times to decide whether to regard a word as French or English.

As to obsolete English words, the policy has been if possible to adopt a normal Middle English spelling which is represented among the quotations, with a cross-reference if necessary. Occasionally this Middle English spelling is inevitably the same as that of a modern quite different word; the two Obsolete Words words, therefore, if both in the concordance and given in full, are mingled. No indication is given with the head-word as to whether the word is modern or Middle English (e.g., Masked, Tire, Wood). A modern word with a prefix or suffix not now used with it is treated as obsolete, but fuller and shorter forms of the same ending are usually together. Obsolete head-words are modernized to the extent of using i for y as a vowel, except sometimes for the prefix y- or at the end of a word and in proper names, and are alphabeted accordingly. Occasional slight liberties in treating head-words have been taken in order to keep in consecutive order words which are closely connected; e.g., Cristen comes with Christian shortly after Christ. The infinitive of obsolete verbs is regularly spelt -e; the preterit plural of obsolete strong verbs is regularly spelt -e(n), and the past participle -en; in the second person singular of the preterit, the -e sometimes but not always found is usually disregarded in alphabeting. When a verb in use to-day has in Chaucer a strong preterit instead of a weak, the archaic form is retained as head-word. It is sometimes difficult to be uniform in practice with the varying archaic preterit forms of strong verbs; when such forms are much varied, they are sometimes put under a single one of them, usually the modern; but it is hoped that the cross-references will prevent trouble. When a word is not easily recognizable as a modern word, the obsolete form is (very rarely) retained as head-word; e.g. Rede (consilium dare) is separate from Read (legere), and Brouke (A. S. brúcan) is not under Brook. Cross-references minimize any danger of inconvenience.

A very large number of words appear in the text sometimes as one word, sometimes hyphenated, and sometimes as two (or more) separate words. The variations in the MSS are aggravated, if anything, by divergent practice on the part of the four Globe editors. Even if they had desired uniformity, it is sometimes difficult to decide whether, for example, we have a compound verb or a verb-adverb combination (cf. Out-twyne, Rosem. 11). With the variations in the text, usually the modern; but it is hoped that the cross-references will prevent trouble. When a word is not easily recognizable as a modern word, the obsolete form is (very rarely) retained as head-word; e.g. Rede (consilium dare) is separate from Read (legere), and Brouke (A. S. brúcan) is not under Brook. Cross-references minimize any danger of inconvenience.

Compound and Hyphenated Words

Such a set would certainly either have sometimes done violence to all usage and expectation, or have been too complicated to be of much service.

A compound printed as one word in the text (with no hyphen) is practically always treated in the concordance as one word, except for compounds of Self, and a very few times with a rare form like "asmoeh," "neveradell." A compound printed as two (with no hyphen) is nearly always two in the concordance; but the safest plan is to look under the combination as well as under the components. With hyphenated words the practise varies. If either part would nowadays be considered a mere prefix or suffix, the parts are practically always together; otherwise usually separate, except sometimes when the text and the concordance have the compound in other passages as a single word. On the whole, in doubtful cases, the tendency has been to make two words rather than one; in case of verbs, to favor the verb-adverb conception rather than the compound verb; but it is possible that the same compound may not always have been treated in the same way in this matter. The intention has been to show by a cross-reference, if necessary, where other cases of a compound may be found (unless the words are consecutive), but even if a cross-reference is wanting it will be safest to look in the second obvious place. In case of a compound which consists of words each of which is represented only by specimens, the concordance shows all cases where printed as one word, but the very fact that the components are not printed completely shows that completeness is not to be expected for the combination. None of these compounds is such that the incompleteness is likely to be often regretted. If one of the components is printed in full, obviously all instances of the compound are either there or under the compound. Of a compound which consists of words each of which is printed in full, obviously all cases can be found either under its own heading or under the components.

Most of the quotations consist merely of a single line of verse or an equivalent bit of prose. The intention has been to present every line of verse fully, in order not to obscure the metrical value of the concordance-word. It has been the intention that every quotation should be extended in which otherwise the concordance-word would be unintelligible or misleading. This work was done by one assistant, verified by another, and supplemented by the editors.

The cross-references, upwards of two thousand, do not pretend to be exhaustive. Usually none is given if the second word comes directly after the first, usually none between the text-reading and a variant, usually none if the second word would inevitably come to mind. The policy has not been to refer from the unfamiliar to the familiar readily associated with it, but only vice versa. Fewer cross-references are given for the Romaunt of the Rose than for other works. A cross-reference does not necessarily imply, even when the words look alike, that they are connected, but merely that someone may wish to consider them together. One point is due to the exceptional character of this concordance, to the great variety of Chaucerian spellings; A see B may mean that some words spelt A are under B, or that some words meaning A are under B. The cross-reference is sometimes used as a danger-signal (as has been stated) when there is doubt as to the correct placing of a word. On cross-references for compound words, see this latter heading in this introduction.

Relatively fewer specimens are taken from the prose than the verse, and few from the Romaunt of the Rose. It has been the intention to represent adequately all meanings and uses of a word, especially unusual and archaic uses, and to some extent the varying spellings; in particular, for certain of the words a point has been made of including all peculiar uses noted by Skeat in his large glossary. The relative frequency of both kinds of variation in Chaucer is not always represented. The use of one of these words in a common phrase is less regarded when other words in the phrase are printed in full. Almost all of these words occur, of course, with very great frequency, some of them enormously so; to say nothing of And and That, of As, for example, there are at least 4,400 cases, and of So at least 3,150. In an early writer it is a pity not to give all instances of prepositions and preterit-present verbs, especially, which vary so subtly from age to age, but it was desirable not to swell the book beyond a single volume. Most of the somewhat less profuse words which are partially omitted are so colorless that it would have been absurd to give them in full. Of Say few cases are omitted except most of those in the Rose and most of those in the phrase "that (this) is to seyne" in the prose works. Of A as a preposition (written for On, etc.) few cases are omitted, but it is marked 'specimens' owing to the probability that now and then one of the makers of the slips has overlooked a case through confusion with the indefinite article. This omission is the less important because this spelling is often due to the whim of a scribe. Likewise of very common words like Be, Have, Man, even the less common parts (except Haveth and Has) are represented merely by specimens owing to the impossibility of being sure that the makers of slips got all these while omitting the commoner forms. All forms of Shall and Will were included almost at the last moment, owing to the importance of these words for the history of the future tense.

Here follow the abbreviations for the titles of Chaucer's works, in the order in which they come in the concordance. The spellings are modernized. When Skeat uses one title and the Globe editor another, both are given, and also the first line of the poem. In the Canterbury Tales the prologs and links (except at the end of a "group") come under the tales which follow. The traditional division of the Abbreviations Tales into nine groups is retained, and also their designation by the letters from A to I, and the corresponding line-numbering, which go back to the Six-text Print of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales (Chaucer Society, issues for 1868-77). Though the present editors believe this division to be erroneous,* there was no choice but to accept it. No doubt any later editor of Chaucer who adopts a different division will give this older nomenclature and line-numbering on every page, so that this concordance and other Chaucer literature will remain intelligible.

Every passage, reference and cross-reference has been verified under the supervision of the editors; likewise the alphabetizing and other arrangement. Much of this has been done more than once. The Globe text has also been entirely checked through to catch omissions, and Skeat's admirable glossary has been very extensively used to ensure completeness and accuracy. The proofs have been in Preparation In spite of everything, it is too much to hope that there are no actual errors. It is certain that there are some inconsistencies, though it is hoped (once more) that the cross-references will minimize their importance. This concordance is not only one of the largest ever made in any language; the archaic and greatly varying forms of words and spellings, and the variations in compounding of words, have made it perhaps quite the most difficult to construct.

III. HISTORICAL

The project for a Chaucer concordance has had a long history, and a distinguished descent.* The concordance was originally planned by the Chaucer Society, which was an offshoot in 1868 of the Early English Text Society. This was founded in 1864 for the publication of a larger number of early English works than the Philological Society could publish, partly in order that they might be available for the purposes of the latter society's New English Dictionary, which was actually begun in 1860 and projected in 1858 or thereabouts. The present volume accordingly is descended in the fourth generation from the greatest work of linguistic scholarship ever produced.

Behind all these creations stands the vivid personality of Frederick James Furnivall (1825-1910), † with his learning, energy and magnetism, and power of striking other people into enthusiastic activity. His versatility and breadth of interests have made him a figure in the biographies of surprisingly numerous men of different types in the later nineteenth century, but philological study was his chief love. The Chaucer concordance was one of his few failures. Information about its early history is found chiefly in announcements by various periodicals, in the publications of the Chaucer Society, and in a mass of several hundred letters and other written papers, which have come into the hands of the present editors. First of all appeared in the Athenaeum for 23 December, 1871, an invitation to volunteer workers to help "make a complete Glossarial Concordance to Chaucer's works," and "complete lists of the poet's rhymes" (later published separately), using the society's reproductions of the MSS as they should appear; a fortnight later Notes and Queries printed a similar notice as to a "Chaucer Concordance and Glossary." Some dozen persons volunteered, and to them Furnivall issued sections of the "Six-Text" and eight pages of printed Rules for the Compilation of the Glossarial Concordance to Chaucer's Works, dated 23 March, 1872, and evidently written by him. A line of poetry or equivalent bit of prose from the MS taken as standard was to be written out, on a slip of paper supplied by the worker himself, for each word to be recorded, with variants (even variant spellings) from the other MSS. Lines were to be numbered merely by the page and line of the society's publications. Ordinary auxiliary verbs, prepositions and other "Particles" were to be recorded only a few times by each worker. The amateur workers were also asked to define for each word its inflectional form and its meaning; and for the final word in a line to note the word it rhymes with. In the sixth report of the society, June, 1876, Furnivall was able to report about half of the Canterbury Tales as fully dealt with, but from that year to 1888 nothing was done. From time to time he made announcements as to the concordance, sometimes cautious and sometimes sanguine, on the covers of the various publications of the Chaucer Society. From 1877 to 1883 or so appeared the statement that Professor Hiram Corson (1828-1911, professor of English in Cornell University from 1870) had "agreed to edit the

* Chaucer lexicography seems to have begun late in the 16th century, and in much the same manner as all early lexicography. At the end of Grammatica Anglicana (by P. Greenwood?), 1594, with a special title-page, is a five-page list of "Vocabula Chauceriana quaedam selectiora et minus vulgaria, ipsae hodie poetarum deliciae, una cum eorum significatis . . . eodem autore." (One of the present editors is here supplementing the British Museum Catalog.) Beginning with Speght's first edition, 1598, glossaries, or explanations of "old and obscure words," are provided by Chaucer editors. The Catalogue of MSS in the Library of the Hunterian Museum in the University of Glasgow, by John Young (Glasgow, 1908), p. 250, mentions a fragmentary MS concordance to Chaucer's works, by an unknown eighteenth century author.

Society's Chaucer Concordance." Furnivall's reports for 1880 and 1881 show some little impatience as to progress, his introduction to Supplementary Canterbury Tales (1888) speaks with still more asperity of "7 years neglect by Prof. Corson," and his report for 1888 states that Professor Corson "was never able to touch it." Considering the state of the material and certain features of the plan, one cannot entirely share Furnivall's feelings.

In 1888 the "Chaucer glossary" or "Glossarial concordance" took a new lease of life, and Furnivall was once more of good cheer. In two of the society's publications for that year he announced the editorship of Mr. W. G. Aylward (an error for W. W. Aylward, died 1893), who retained the responsibility till 1891. This editor preferred to serve under the name of Wilson Graham, by which Furnivall mentions him as editor for the concordance in the introduction mentioned just above. He had helped in preparing F. S. Ellis' Lexical Concordance to Shelley (published in 1892), a work obviously modeled on the plan of the Chaucer concordance. "Mr. Graham" began energetically. Announcements, and calls for volunteers to make the remaining slips, appeared in the Athenaeum (4 August, 6 October, 1888, 26 July, 1890), and numerous other papers in Britain and America. Professor F. J. Child promoted the work in America by a notice in the New York Nation, 11 October, 1888, and by other means. Furnivall's former Rules, with trifling changes, were reprinted and distributed, and the work proceeded as before. "Mr. Graham" carried on a large correspondence for four years with his unknown and tyro helpers, patiently answering questions, interpreting rules, and sometimes providing standardized slips and paying expenses. Some recruits deserted, others wrote dubious, warning and even sub-acid letters as to the plan, but by 1891 apparently nearly all the slips had been made, and hope began to skip over the long road ahead and consider negotiations toward printing, perhaps in America.

In 1891 "Mr. Graham" relinquished the editorship to Dr. Ewald Flügel (1863-1914), then a Privatdozent in the University of Leipzig, who the year before had agreed to take it; a young scholar with achievements already to his credit, son and grandson of widely-known lexicographers and scholars.* The announcement appeared in the Athenaeum for 18 July, 1891. His editorship is mentioned on the covers of the society's publications dated from 1890 on, and ceases in 1911, shortly after Furnivall's death; the first few of these volumes Furnivall may have ante-dated, as he often did on his usual principle of nullus annus sine linea. The hundreds of thousands of slips which Dr. Flügel inherited were in no inviting condition. Some of the helpers had been or became persons of distinction in scholarship; among the others, Mrs. H. R. Haweis (died 1898), who wrote peppery letters about the concordance, had done much to popularize Chaucer, and H. H. Gibbs (1819-1907) became governor of the Bank of England and Lord Aldenham. But most of them seem to have been persons without any particular scholarly training. The material was on slips of all sizes, shapes, colors, weights and textures, from paper that was almost tissue-paper to paper that was almost tin. Every slip contained matter that had to be reconsidered, revised and often added to or deleted. Further, certain small parts of Chaucer's work had not been concordanced at all, yet there seems to have been no reliable record as to just what had been done or not done, or as to policies and decisions. In 1892 at the age of twenty-nine Dr. Flügel became professor of English philology in Stanford University, and found a task requiring relatively few books a suitable one in his situation. The library, now adequate, and housed in one of the most beautiful university library buildings in America, was small in the pioneer days of the institution. He took hold with enthusiasm, and formed a plan which he realized would take many years to execute. In 1900 the Delegates of the Clarendon Press considered printing the work when it should be finished, much as Furnivall had hoped in 1888; reserving decision till they had seen more of it, they thought the plan at that time "a little ambitious," and believed a pure concordance to be what was needed. After some years of discouragement, from 1904 to 1908 Professor Flügel received from the recently established Carnegie Institution of Washington very large subventions, which enabled him to employ more expert assistance than he could find among immature college students, to pay for verifying and copying in European libraries, and during the years 1904-7 to devote his entire time to this work. He had leave from his university, and pursued his task in Leipzig, where for the more exacting parts of the work he was aided by Professor Eugen Einkenel and others. He himself collated parts of the Chaucer Society's printed copies with the MSS, and it is in consequence of his revelation of the inaccuracy of its copy of the Ellesmere MS that a superb facsimile of it was published at the Manchester University Press in 1911. Besides the immense mass of Chaucer-slips over which he toiled, he collected with the aid of students and others some million slips giving the occurrences of words in other early English writers, and in French and Latin, largely extracted from glossaries in the publications of the Early English Text Society and elsewhere. His estimate in 1908 of a total of about 1,120,000 slips in hand seems moderate.

* See Flügel Memorial Volume (University Series, XXI.), Stanford University, 1916; Anglia, XXXIX. i-xiv; Ewald Flügel, Eine Darstellung seines Lebens und Wirkens, mit einem Vorwort von Felix Flügel (Germanische Studien, XLI.; Berlin, 1926).

The nature of his plan and its progress are shown in his reports in the Year Books of the Carnegie Institution for 1904-8. The history and plan are more vividly exhibited in descriptions and specimens printed in 1911 and 1913 in Anglia (of which he was one of the editors), XXXIV. 354-422, XXXVII. 497-532. He now recognized that what he had earlier hoped to do would require as he says the labors of a whole academy. His scheme, still very extensive, was modeled more or less on the Oxford Dictionary, and in his last years involved giving for each word the following entries, so far as applicable: (1) Occurrences and forms of the word in Middle English, Anglo-Saxon, Old French, Latin, and other languages, of various dialects and periods; this often involved discussion of etymology, frequency, synonyms, usage and meaning, often at very great length. (2) Spellings and inflections in Chaucer, with their frequency and the MSS where found. (3) Words with which the word rimes in Chaucer. (4) Its prosodic value—accentuation and number of syllables. (5) Variant readings, with the MSS where found. (6) All the passages where the word appears in Chaucer, with definitions and an unusually large amount of context; the passages are not arranged in a fixed order, but very much divided and subdivided under the various meanings and uses. The most notable feature is the collection of the earliest occurrences of words, large numbers of citations from languages other than English, and the detailed analysis of meanings and uses. No mere description can do justice to the dignity and amplitude of this work of scholarship, if it could have been completed and published. It would have set a new high-water mark for lexicography within its limited scope; and it anticipated the prophecy of the editors of the Oxford Dictionary that further progress in the field must be with the specialized vocabularies of certain subjects, authors or periods. In 1913 he estimated that he had completed the preliminary draft of A-E, "about 20,000 quarto sheets," and that he might finish the whole work in seven years more. However this might have been, he was still unwilling even to consider the subject of beginning to print. At his death in November, 1914, the work was more or less finished, subject to extensive additions and revision, as far as H. Completed on the same scale it would have formed five or six volumes the size of the present work. Had he lived as far as might have been fairly expected beyond the age of fifty-one, with health, financial support, extensive assistance and means of publication, there is no reason why he could not have seen it all through the press.

In 1915 the present editors, one of whom had been associated for some years with Professor Flügel in this enterprise, undertook with renewed support from the Carnegie Institution to determine what was best to do with what he had left. One of the first questions to answer was obviously whether the essential materials were complete—whether all the slips for Chaucer's works had been made. Aside from the fact noted already that no slips had been made for certain passages, and the fact that there had been certain known losses, it could not be assumed that during all these years there had been no sporadic oversights and leakage. There is no information as to how Dr. Flügel had satisfied himself as to the part which he had worked over, but it was quite certain that the latter two-thirds of the alphabet had not been properly tested. An adequate test made by several colleagues of the editors showed that at least one-half of one per cent of the slips were missing, from various parts of the work, including so peculiar a word as "Preambulacioun." Such incompleteness showed clearly that the old Chaucer slips must be abandoned, unless the concordance element in the plan, deemed the most essential by all persons concerned, were also to be abandoned. The making of new slips necessarily involved the reduction of the plan; after so long a history it was vital to look confidently for completion in a small number of years. While people have been waiting for this work, and while concordance-enthusiasts have been warned off the Chaucer field, a dozen lesser English poets have been thus opened to more accurate study.

This decision meant putting aside for the time being all of Professor Flügel's work; happily only for the time being. To see the fruits of such learning and labor go to waste would have been a weight on the spirit of everyone aware of the facts. His analysis of the semasiology and usages of Chaucer's vocabulary in the first third of the alphabet, and amassing of instances of his words in earlier authors in several languages, would form a valuable contribution to any dictionary of later medieval English. That his Schmerzens-kind, or daily delight, as he variously called it, should be used in a work of wider scope would doubtless have pleased this generous scholar. Through the loyalty and public-spirit of his heirs, his entire MS and collections were transferred in 1925 to Cornell University, to be used for the newly projected dictionary of Middle English; under happier stars, it is to be hoped, than those of the "Glossarial Concordance" projected in 1871.

The present volume is the result of the reduced plan forced by the situation, and is the fruit of entirely fresh materials. Though it is unpretending compared with the work planned by Furnivall, Aylward and Flügel, and in some ways much less valuable, undoubtedly the simple concordance-arrangement of the passages has advantages over the dictionary-arrangement, as exemplified in the Shelley concordance. The enterprise has had the advantage of the greatly improved technique in concordance-making developed in recent years. Its beginning had to be delayed till the war was over; its history since then was described in 1923 in Modern Language Notes, XXXVIII. 504-6.

This work would have been impossible without the help of many people, most of them volunteers. Thanks are gladly given to the following generous collaborators, some of them college professors and deans, scattered all the way from Massachusetts to Honolulu, for making the slips: Mrs. R. L. Hampton, Mrs. S. A. Huston, Mrs. F. N. Kerwin (double amount), Mrs. W. E. Lockwood, Mrs. G. H. Martin, Mrs. W. A. Matzinger, Mrs. N. H. Petree, Mrs. L. E. Read, Mrs. Ira Van Vlear; Misses A. M. Bille, J. M. Burnham, Mary Calloway, E. J. Cleveland, H. L. Cohen, C. A. Davidson, Charlotte D'Evelyn (double amount), B. K. Freeman, Pauline Gartzman (double amount), Harriet Hayes, M. B. Jefferds, M. S. Kerns, M. F. Loop, A. F. Potts, Mary Purdy, Margaret Richter, E. P. Rings, I. E. Ronan, Elizabeth Servis (double amount), E. N. Stalker, M. A. Stanford, J. M. Tatlock, Grace Thomasma; Messrs. A. G. Beach, J. K. Bonnell (deceased), L. N. Broughton, C. H. Conley, J. D. Cooke, B. G. Grim, G. H. Hartwig, Gilbert Knipmeyer, M. L. McClintock, Walter MacKellar, B. F. Stelter, H. A. Stevens, A. H. Upham, S. L. Wolff, C. W. Wright.

Much other important help was supplied. The editors are grateful for the assistance of Mr. A. A. Bennett. Miss A. N. Hays and Mr. Gilbert Knipmeyer gave time freely to making slips for variants and for specimens selected by the editors, and for verifying, sorting and the like, and Professor W. H. Davis for expert proof-reading. Without the intelligence, accuracy and speed of Miss Phyllis M. Carbaugh the work would have been done less quickly and well. The liberal use allowed (as mentioned already) by Professors F. N. Robinson and R. K. Root of the variants for their editions encourages the hope that too many important variants have not been missed. The same may be said of the use of the Stevenson-MacCracken collations allowed by Dr. J. T. T. Brown, President H. N. MacCracken and Sir William S. McCormick. The family of the late Professor Flügel freely allowed the use of his materials and equipment, which in some cases have saved much time and promoted accuracy. Professor Lane Cooper, most experienced of concordance-makers, helped in various ways; in particular, the instructions for preparing the slips were based, with great modifications, on those sent out by him for the concordance to Horace. For the mere pleasure of mentioning his name, the editors add that of Professor George Lyman Kittredge, to whom both of them owe the same heavy debt as all students of early English, and one of them much more than this. Finally, all the gratitude does not go to individuals. The Carnegie Institution of Washington made the undertaking possible by adequate financial aid; under President Woodward and President Merriam alike it has been invariably helpful and generous. Stanford University has showed its habitual public spirit and sympathy for scholarship by allowing the present editors, as it had allowed Professor Flügel, much free time and other assistance.

Ye wolde han slain yourself anon? quod she,—
And that anon, ye n'il not trowe how sone!
I saw anon right hir figure . . .
Anoon as we have you receyved, . . .
Up to the paleys, anon-right . . .
Now entreth in my breeste anon!
'I werne hit yow,' quod she, anon,
Upon payne to be blynde anon,
But in I wente, and that anon;
And doun anon on knees falle;
Blow thy trompe and that anon,
And gan him tellen, anon-right,
And doun on knees anon-ryght I me sette,
That ryght anon, as that they gonnes espye
Anon the neddes gonne hir for to styng,
And for my parte I shal anon it kythe.
Anon hire herte hath pitee of his woe,
The wikked fame up ros, and that anon,
And gate him there a newe barge anon,
And to a knave a ryng she yaf anon,
And when this letter was forthre sent anone,

Seke the booke of seynt Austyne,
In thilke booke that I recorde.
But I trowe that the booke seith wele,
He made a booke, and lete it write.
Broughten a booke with sory grace
This booke, of which I telle heere,
That he ne mighte bye the booke
Mighte men in that booke fynde
Ayens this false horrible boke,
And to the juge the booke to take.
But they that broughten the boke there
For by that booke they durst not stonde.
That in that booke written is.
That in cure booke written is.
Thus mych wote our booke signifie,
May men in that booke se,
As men may in the booke biholden.
But hadde that ilke booke endured,
Thou woldest on a boke have sworne,
Twenty bookes clad in blak or reed
On bookes and his lernynge he it spente,
So wel they lovede, as olde bookes sayn,

For elles moste we oure bookes selle;
As knownen they that han hir bookes herd.
But in his studie, ther as his bookes be,
Into my studie, ther as my bookes be,

That highten voltoours, as bookes telle;
For herof ben ther maketh bookes twelve.
I wol you telle, as techen bookes olde.
As writen clerkes in hir bookes olde,
"O blake night, as folk in bokes rede,
And certeinly, but-if that bookes erre,
And trewely, as men in bokes rede,
And othre seyn, as they in bookes finde,
For wise folk in bokes it expresse,
This Diomedes, as bokes us declare,
No good word, for thise bokes wol me shende.
Take every man now to his bokis bede,
He comen is, as men in bokes finde.
"Of which, as olde bookes tellen us,
By ligne, or elles olde bookes telle!
And starf anon, as us the bookes telle!
For whom, as olde bookes tellen us,
As men may in thise olde bookes rede,
Ye may her gilt in othre bookes seel!
In poetrye, if ye hir bokis sechel!
As men may ofte in bokes rede,
To make bookes, songes, or dytees,
Than mote we to bokes that we fynde,—
And if that olde bookes were away,
Wel oughte us thanne on olde bokis leve,
Thise bookes, ther we han noon other preve.
On bokes for to rede I me delyte,
That fro my bokes maketh me to goon,
yeve credence To bokis olde and don hem reverence
Ne in alle thy bokis ne coudist thou nat fynde
Yis, God wot, sixty bokis, olde and newe,
But for he usyth bokis for to make,
And in thy bookes alle thou shalt hem fynde;
And with that worde my bokis gan I take,
As certeinly, but-if that bookes lye,
In al my bookes, save this Piramus,
And he is strike out of my bookes clene
Spoke in bokis diversely.
In bokis sothly as I rede.
Thus han tho bookes tolde me.
Of al this [bookes] that they hyde;

 As wel as kan a knyght, withouten drede,' . . .
 'What was the cause; tel me if thou kan.' . . .
 I kan namore, my tale is at an ende . . .
 He kan so lightly cacche hym in his trappe, . . .
 For I can suffre it as a philosophre, . . .
 Can he oght telle a myrie tale or tweye, . . .
 He kan of murthe, and eek of jolitee . . .
 'I seye, my lord kan swich subtiltee,— . . .
 God it amende! I can sey yow namore.' . . .
 Al that I kan anon now wol I telle, . . .
 For alle our sleighes we kan nat conclude . . .
 Though I by ordre hem nat reheres kan, . . .
 Thogh I ne kan nat sette hem in hir kynde, . . .
 And konne he letterure, or konne he noon, . . .
 Yet of that art they kan nat wexen sadde, . . .
 They kan nat stynte til no thyng be left; . . .
 For as men seyn he kan doon craftily, . . .
 I kan nat telle wher on it was along, . . .
 To swich a man I kan never seyn nay.' . . .
 How I kan werken in philosophy; . . .
 That kan an hundred fold moore subtiltee . . .
 This preest hym biseth in al that he kan . . .

 In Engelond ther kan no man it make.' . . .
 In this craft, that men kan nat come therby, . . .
 'Allas! kan they nat flee the fires heete?' . . .
 If that youre even kan nat seen aright, . . .
 Of philosophres understonde kan; . . .
 This worthy Phebus dooth al that he kan . . .
 That we ne konne in no thyng han plessaunce, . . .
 Do yow plessaunce lefful, as I kan; . . .
 I kan nat geeste "rum, ram, ruf," by lettre; . . .
 Telle youre avys . . . I kan no bettre seye . . .
 as ferforth as he kan; al moot be . . .
 no man kan outrely telle the nombre of twigges . . .
 that I kan nat declare . . .
 or in a shulder-boon of a sheepe! I kan nat seye . . .
 'Allas! kan a man nat bithynke hym on the gospel . . .

 any man kan rekene, right as he somtyme is cause . . .
 ne konne nat the mysterie of preesthode . . .
 for she kan nat patiently suffre . . .
 declared yow as I kan the sevene deedly synnes, and . . .
 that a man konne shryve him of his . . .
 My selven kan not telle why . . .
 If he kan make me sleepe sone, . . .
 To konne wel my sweven rede . . .
 And was this, for ful wel I kan . . .
 Thise hunte konne hym nowher see.' . . .
 Amende hit, if I can or may . . .
 Whether his herte can have pite . . .
 For Fortune can so many a wyle, . . .
 Ther be but fewe kan hir begyle, . . .
 'No,' quod he, 'I can not so.' . . .
 Here yow as wel as I kan.' . . .
 That I ne can descryven hit! . . .
 I have no wit that can suffice . . .
 'Allas! thought I, I can no reed; . . .
 Ful ever rehersen hit I can, . . .
 I can not now wel cunfretete . . .

So wel, I can nat telle how.
 As I can best! and that anon.
 Lady, thi sorwe kan I not portreye
 Resceyve me,—I can no further fien.
 As I best can, I wol it seyn and synge,
 And then hir joye, for oght I can espye,
 Nigh deed for drede, can he hir not chevisel!
 Can I nat fynde, and yit my sorwful herte!
 For to be deed, I can hit nought arace;
 I can but love hir best, my swete fo;
 As any man can, or may, on-lyve [here].
 That elde, which that al can frete and bite,—
 For so ferforth he kan hir trouthe assure.
 To be in love as fals as ever he can.
 Right as an hors, that can both bite and pleyne;
 And I ne can myn herte not restrayne
 But god save swich a lorde I can no more
 Of whiche, as shortly as I can it trete,
 Can I not seyn if that the cause were
 Than man can telle; ne never wolde it nyghte,
 And of the Crafft that can and hath the myght
 Of whiche that clerkes wel devyse kunne.
 The stare, that the counseyl can be-wrye;
 For other bond can I noon on hir knette;
 As wel as that my wit can me suffyse,
 'I ne sey not this by me, for I ne can
 But I can shape hereof a remedye,
 Of which he neyther rede can, ne synge;
 I can not se that arguments avayle;
 But sooth is seyd, "a fool can noght be stille."
 Who can a resoun fynde, or wit in that?
 But ye men, certes, ne konne doon no thyng aright,
 but yif it be
 That helpeth lovers, as I can, to pleyne!
 Who-so that can may rede hem as they write.
 Ther n'is nat oon can war by other bel!
 And yit as proud a pecock can he pulle!
 To scornen Love, which that so soone can
 To folwen Love, that you so wel can lede.
 Blessed be Love, that can thus folk convertel!
 As I best can, now wolde God, Criseyde,
 But how it was, certeyn, I can not seye,—
 That so can leve our jolite on presse,
 By good counseil can kepe his frend therfro.
 Grevaunces, n'oughte connen wel the more Counseillen
 And yett parmaunter can I reden thes,
 But to thyn help yit somwhat can I seye.
 As I best can, gon sithen longe while.
 Quod Troilus. "For al that evere ye connen,
 A thousand fold more than he can deserve!"
 Ne alle the men that riden connen or go
 He hasteth wel that wisly can abide.
 And conne it counseil kepe in swich a wise
 And conne an errour alderbest withstonde.
 'Now, Pandarus, I can no more seye
 A blind man can-not juggen wel in hewes.
 That herkneth, as the story can devise
 Myn auctour shal I folwen, if I conne.
 How that the bishop, as the book can telle,
 For al this world ne can I rede what
 Hir might is wide y-knowe, and what they connen.
 And, wher him list, best felawshipe can
 Wher-as they can not pleylich understonde:
 Som time is shape, if he it can receive;
 Ful lightly founden, and ye conne it take!
 Think ek how wel and wisly that he can
 What men wolde of it deme I can not seye:
 Ne love a man ne can I naught, ne may
 'Can he wel speke of love?' quod she; 'I preye,
 As I can clepe ayein now to my minde,
 For love, and lat me live as I can!"
 Therto we wretched women nothing connen
 That to myn is swich love, I can not see,
 As I best can, to you, Lord, yive ich al
 These lovers, as they conne faire endite!"
 Ye conne wel the blisse of love descrive.
 Aught fair in heven?, (why? for they can telle!)
 Quod she, 'I can abide til they be gon!
 Can he theron? For by my trouthe I n'ot!
 'Ye, for I can so write,' quod she tho,
 Th' effect, as fer as I can understonde,—
 The whiche can thes hele of thyn access.
 Answerde, 'It shal be don! And I can finde.
 I n'ot wher ye the more thank me connen!
 For aught he can, when that so he bykneue!
 And seide him, 'Now is time, if that thou conne,
 And what it is I leve I can a-rede!
 'He is, he can, that fewe lordes conne!
 'I seye for me, best is, as I can knowe,
 But it were I; for I can in a throwe
 Rehers her cas, unlik that she can seye;
 That can her cas wel bet than I declare.
 Upon you two: com off now, if ye connen!
 When they can not construe how it may jo
 God leve him werken as he can devise!
 And sire, his lesson that he wende konne
 And though I dar ne can unto you pleyne,
 And in swich forme as ye can now devyse
 Wolde it biwreye, or dorste, or sholde konne,

I can no more, but that I wol thee serve
 That can I deme of possibilitie.
 That trewely, for aught I can espye,
 And seide, 'Nee, see how this lord can knele
 Can I not seyn, for she bad him not rise,
 Al can I not as muche as it were right;
 Quod Pandarus, 'For aught I can espyen,
 I can no more, but of this like tweye,
 I can no more, but laude and reverence
 I can no more, but thus thise like tweye
 That is so heigh that no man can it telle!
 But how al-though I can not tellen al
 As can myn auctour of his excellence,
 Of which I can not tellen no scripture;
 That of the pens that he can mokin and keche
 This brighte morwe? Nee, how can ye fare?'
 And lat se now, if that he can be merie!
 Can not the mountaine of a knotte unbide,
 I can no more but, sin that ye wol wende,
 And can to foles so her song entune
 If oon can singe, another can wel daunce;
 And this is fair, and that can good a-right.
 But as for me, certein, I can not leve
 Swich vanite ne can don her non ese,
 And ek the beste as my wit can comprede;
 Can he for me so pitously compleyne?
 And that that I can helpe, it shal not fail!
 Ne, if she can herself disturben it,
 Wher-with she can, if I shal right arede,
 This sorwful man can now no maner red,
 For signe of lif, for aught he can or may,
 Can he non finde in no cas on Criseyde,
 Criseyde, and sin ye can do me no werse,
 And to the beste, in aught that I can see,
 And me also. Beth glad now, if ye conne,
 I can not sen wherof ye sholden drede.
 Bifore a crepil, for he can the craff:
 For-which that wey, for aught I can espye,
 To ben a wif, and as he can wel preche,
 Ne, dredeles, in me ther can not sinke.
 For everich other wey ye can recorde,
 That I ne can imagin a wey
 I can no more, it shal be founde at preve!
 To quite him wel, that so wel he can deserve!
 For mannes had imaginen ne can,
 And seide, 'Y-wis, ye Grekes can have joye
 For trewely ther can no wight you serve,
 Al can I not to you, my lady dere,
 Who can conforten now your hertes werre?
 That swich a wo my wit can not define:
 And causeles, for-which I can no more;
 I can not sen in him no remedye
 And, for they can a time of sorwe endure,
 That glade, y-wis, can him no festeynge.
 God help me so, I can not tellen whider
 'What may it be? Who can the sothe gesse,
 To gon ayein, for aught I can him quemen;
 With al the sleighte and al that evere he can,
 Ther nas no lak in aught I can espyen.
 But trewely I can not telle her age.
 'Can I not seyn what may the cause be,
 To serve you as hertly as I can,
 What I shal after don, can I not seye:
 And best can say his lady honour kepe.'
 To loke if they can sen aught of Criseyde.
 'Now douteles this lady can her good!
 He can now sen non other remedye
 I can not trowen she wol write ayein;
 Compleyning as I dar or can endite.
 Right as your herte ay can, my lady free,
 I can no more, but, cheste of every care,
 My joye, in wo: I can seye you nought elles,
 Criseyde shal not conne knowen me.
 But now no for! I can not in you gesse
 That this shal be, that can I not a-poynt.
 Ye han me cast! And I ne can no may,
 Deliver her sonel! I can no more seyl!
 Swich is this world! Who-so it can biholde,
 Of his lovinge, I have said as I can.
 Red Dares: he can telle hem alle i-fere.
 Save Ector in his time, as I can here.
 Ne can hem noght, ne never thyneke
 The which, as I can now remembre,
 'I wol now synge, gif that I can,
 I can not of that faculte.
 Now see I wel, and telle can,
 We wretched wymmen conne noon art;
 How sore that ye men conne grone,
 Sawe he whyche no tonge can telle
 Or Daunte, that hit telle can.
 Right at the wyket, yif I can
 That English understonde kan,
 How high, I cannot telle yow,
 Quod he to me, 'that can I preve
 'A ha!' quod he, 'lo, so I can,
 Of thynges that he can not demeyne!
 Therfor I can hem now beleve.
 Ne can I not to you devyse,
 Whiche that I cannot nevne,

Cheer—Continued

Glad was this jube, and maked him greet cheere,
Sire Pardoner, be glad and myrie of cheere;
But certainly I made folk swich cheere,
I weeped algate and made sory cheere,
He made alway a maner louring chiere
And forth he gooth with a ful angry cheere,
For Goddes sake! as beth of bettere cheere!
Hir meeke preyere, and hir pitous cheere,
Upon hir chiere he gan hym ofte avyse,
Of so yong age, as wel in chiere as dede;
And she with reverence, in humble cheere,
And forth he gooth with a ful sobre cheere
With stierne face and with ful trouble cheere,
Neither in word, or chiere, or countenance,
Al dreyn was his cheere and his lookyng,
Despitously, and gan a cheere make
And of Grisildis wordes and hire cheere
If by his wyves chere he myghte se,
That she no chiere made of hevynesse,
And thus in greet noblesse and with glad cheere,
But with glad chiere to the gate is went
With so glad chiere his gastes he receyvethe,
Hir glade chiere, and no malice at al,
That it was deyntee for to seen the cheere
Be ay of chiere, as light as leef on lynde,
Mayus, that sit with so benyngne a chiere,
And kiste his wyf, and made wantowne cheere.
According to his wordes was his cheere,
It was so wrapped under humble cheere,
With so heigh reverence, and, as by his cheere,
But daunceh, justeth, maketh hire good cheere;
Dooth to his maister chiere and reverence,
With dredful herte and with ful humble cheere,
With face pale and with ful sorwful cheere,
This housebonde, with glad chiere, in frendly wyse,
'To whom?' quod he; 'com forth with right good
cheere;
Cecile hem seyde with a ful stedefast cheere,
And in thyngot putte it with myrie cheere,
For trewely, me thyngketh by thy cheere, in chiere, and in dede. Eke ther been
Right so me thyngketh by thy cheere.
With no-thing but with scouryng of hir cheere.
And Venus he salueth, and maketh chiere,
For hir that with unfeyned humble cheere
But he was fals, hit nas but feyned cheere,—
Ne to no creature ne made she chere,
Alas! and is ther now nother word ne chere,
Your chere flourisheth, but it wol not sode,
Within the temple, with a sorwful chere,
With hed enclenyd and with humble chere
For to reherse hir chere and hir spekyng:
hir deceyvable chere to me ward, myn unpistous lif casten wrothly the chere downward to byholdyng my chere that was cast to cheynes, and bethen his chere enclenyd
he may holden his chere undisconfited.

the humble chere of hym that is discourfited.
keypyng the dignyte of hir cheere and
And to a sorwful tale, a sory chere!
with chere and voys ful pytous and wepyng
And she him thanked with ful humble chere,
Simple of aïr and debonaire of chere,
And caughte ayein his friste playng chere.
Gan for to like her movyng and her chere,
He neither chere made, ne word tolde;
And al his chere and speche also he borneth,
Into her hand, and with ful humble chere
Love hath bi-setteth thre well! Be of good chere!
With sobre chere, although his herte playde:—
As thus,—in open doing or in chere,
And frendly tales, and with mery chere,
That naught desiereth but your frendly chere,
But only that ye make him bettere chere . . .
Yit have I leve me maken him good chere . . .
Swich chere him doth, that he and I may liven!
Crisyde anon gan al his chere spyen,
And took it nought, but al hir humble chere
With dredful chere, and ofte his bewes muwe;
His person, his array, his look, his chere,
But, wilt thou stinten of this woful chere,
Of sleightes, for to coveren al thy chere . . .
What nedeth you to tellen al the chere
Hem as he myghte, and chere good he made.
For which with sobre chere her herte lough;
Avised wel her wordes and her chere;
That crueltee with so benigne a chier . . .
That word is good, and this shal be my chere;
With look down-cast and humble yolden chere,—
By Troulles he lay, with blisful chere,
And kep thee close, and be now of good chere,
Ech rakel dede and ech unbridled chere . . .
That every word or look, or sonde or chere
And graunte it gladly with a frendes chere
And Pandarus, with a ful sobre chere,
Though ther be mercy written in your chere,

Criseyde—Continued

Him of Criseyde, and of her wommanhede,
 Is with Criseyde, his owne herte swete.
 For how Criseyde Troilus forsook.
 To bringen hom King Thous and Criseyde;
 Whan axed was for Antenor Criseyde;
 For Antenor how they wolde han Criseyde,
 That al our vois is to forgon Criseyde,
 Criseyde which that nevere dide hem scathe
 For Antenor to yelden out Criseyde,
 So sore him sat the chaunging of Criseyde,
 Shal thus Criseyde away, for-that thou wilt?
 Criseyde, allas, til that the breth me faile.
 'If that Criseyde allone were me laft
 Sin ye Criseyde and me han fully brought
 And folwe alwey Criseyde thy lady dere
 'O my Criseyde, O lady sovereyne
 For Antenor to yelden so Criseyde,
 'For Antenor how lost is my Criseyde?'
 Al freshly newe, and lat Criseyde go!
 Criseyde to forgon, for she was myn,
 That if Criseyde, which that is thy lief,
 The whiche tale anon right as Criseyde
 So to Criseyde of women com a route
 Criseyde, ful of sorwful piete
 What is Criseyde worth from Troilus?
 Was to Criseyde, as ye han herd devise
 Unto Criseyde, in a ful secrete wise,
 For if Criseyde had erst compleyned sore,
 Was cause causing first to me Criseyde,
 Torned her tho Criseyde, a wo makinge
 Ben fled and thus luth now Criseyde allone
 From Troilus thus wordes to Criseyde:
 'Go, go Criseyde, and uncle, trewely,
 Hath seyn alwey me to forgon Criseyde,
 Or bring Criseyde and me from this distresse!
 What, parde, yit is not Criseyde ago!
 With broken vois, al hoors for-shright, Criseyde
 Can he non finde in no cas on Criseyde,
 Criseyde, and sin ye can do me no werse,
 And thou, Criseyde, swete herte dere,
 And he answerde, 'Herte myn, Criseyde,
 For which Criseyde upon him gan biholde,
 Til at the laste this woful wight, Criseyde,
 'And thenk right thus: "Criseyde is now agon,
 But natheles the wending of Criseyde,
 Criseyde him, with a sik, right in this wise
 Me glade, as wis I nevere unto Criseyde,
 For which Criseyde moste out of the toun,
 Criseyde unto the Grekes ost to lede,
 Lest that Criseyde, in rumour of this fare,
 Criseyde, whan she redy was to ride,
 Criseyde unto that purpos lite answerde,
 And pitously he cri'd upon Criseyde,
 O herte myn, Criseyde! O swete fol!
 Ful bisly Criseyde his lady soughte
 Criseyde comel' and ther-with gan he singe.
 Or Calcas sende Troilus Criseyde!
 They gonne spoken of Criseyde the brighte;
 'As go we sen the paleis of Criseyde:
 That thou Criseyde ayen me sende sone.
 Ther-as Criseyde out-rod a ful good pase;
 —Upon that other side was Criseyde,
 'Lord, whether thou yit thanke upon Criseyde!
 Criseyde mene was of her stature,
 Sin that Criseyde out of the cite yede,
 Criseyde, at shorte wordes for to telle,
 Criseyde, that was in her paynes stronge
 Me thinketh thus, O lady myn Criseyde,
 Of Calidoyne and Arge a king, Criseyde!
 It preveth wel, he spak so that Criseyde
 Whan that Criseyde unto her reste wente
 This Diomedes is come unto Criseyde;
 To loke if they can sen sought of Criseyde.
 Into this toun ne com'th not here Criseyde.
 And yit com nought to Troilus Criseyde.
 'For thilke night I last Criseyde say,
 Lay, kissing ay, his lady bright, Criseyde:
 'My lady bright, Criseyde, hath me betrayed,
 Thus in my drem Criseyde I have biholde,—
 'O my Criseyde, allas! what subtilite,
 Who hath me reft Criseyde, al my plessaunce?
 God wot, I wen'de, O lady bright, Criseyde,
 And to Criseyde, his owne lady dere,
 Criseyde shal not come knownen me.
 This letre forth was sent unto Criseyde,
 Of Troilus, for taryng of Criseyde,
 To gete ayen Criseyde bright of hewe,
 For which Criseyde upon a day, for routhe
 A broche, that he Criseyde yaf that morwe
 Than spak he thus, 'O lady bright, Criseyde,
 That ye, Criseyde, coude han changed so,
 How trewe is now thy nece bright, Criseyde!
 But trewely Criseyde, swete may,
 What sholde I seye? I hate, y-wis, Criseyde;
 Criseyde lov'th the sone of Tydeus,
 That, al be that Criseyde was untrewed,
 And thus bigan his loving of Criseyde
 How that Criseyde Troilus forsook.
 And of Criseyde thou hast seyd as the lyste,

Day—Continued

'Alas! quod John, "the day that I was born!
And we had han an il fit at this day;
And when this jape is tald another day;
The day is come, I may no longer byde;
They been ful wrotte al day, as men may see.
Upon a day, when he his papir soghte,
The ark of his artificial day hath runne
He wiste it was the eightetete day
And for that day, as in that latitude,
The fourth party of this day is gon.
Lordynges, the tyme wasteth nyght and day
'But of my tale how shall I doon this day?
Fro day to day, as I shall yow devyse.
The day is comen of hir departynge—
I seye, the woful day fatal is come,
O Sathan, envious syn thilke day . . .
She rydeth to the sowdan on a day,
Upon thy glade day have in thy mynde
That day that I shal drenchen in the depe!
Bright was the sonne, as in that someres day,
So be thy stronge champion this day;
I am yowre servant bothe nyght and day.
The ferte day toward the ship she wente;
Thow haven of refut, brighte sterre of day,—
The sorwe that this Alla nyght and day . . .
And som-tyme Est, ful many a wery day,
Ful many a day, but, shortly, this is thende,
Upon a day fil in swich repentance,
And so bifel that in a day or two . . .
To vouches-sauf som day with hym to dyne.
The day goth faste, I wol no longer lette.
Fro day to nyght it changeth as the tyde.
Who lyved ever in swich delit to day . . .
But was as glad therof as fowel of day;
But so bifel this marchant on a day . . .
With hym and with his wyf a day or tweye,
This marchant and this monk, a day or tweye.
The thriddle day this marchant up ariseth,
For at a certeyn day I wol yow paye,
For by my chilyndre it is pryde of day.
Com down to-day, and lat yow bagges stonde.
Shal fasting al this day alenge goon?
'To Flaundes wol I go to-morwe at day,
And if that any thyng, by day or nyght,
I shal nat faille surely of my day,
Til it was day, that Daun John wente his way,
And bad the meynne, Fare wel, have good day!
For ye so kyndely this oother day . . .
When it was day this marchant cam embrace
Fro day to day, and if so be I faille,
That day by day to scole was his wone;
But on a day his felawe gan he preye . . .
Fro day to day, til he koude it by rote,
Twice a day it passed thurgh his throte,
And so bifel upon a day,
Er it be fully pryde of day,
Til on a day . . .
Upon a day bifel, that he for his fro day to nyght that with the grace of God concescen day by day. And thanne shul what day that it like unto yowre noblesse to this day, do it, and abide nat, ne
assigned hem a certeyn day to retourne
And when the day cam that his
Fro day to nyght, right thus she wol bigynne,—
I woot wel she wol do me sles som day
And slepyng in hir barn upon a day . . .
His foemen made a feeste upon a day,
That er that he had wered it half a day,
That heeld the regne after his fader day,
And on a day bifel that in that hour
Thus day by day this child bigan to crye,
And kiste his fader, and dyde the same day;
And after that, withinne a day or two,
That ilke clooth that he hadde wered o day,
The senatours he slow upon a day,
As fer as that the day bigynne the dawne,
Upon a day, as he was wont to goon,
Syn thilke day that she was last a wyf,
He fothered hir an hundred tyme a day . . .
Syn thilke day that she was seven nyght oold,
A day or two ye shul have digest yow
'And so bifel that longe er it were day,
For on the morwe, as soone as it was day,
As soone as day he wente out of the toun.
Mordre wol out, that se we day by day;
But on a day, agayn the even-tyde,
Hym mette a wonder drem, agayn the day:
As for that day, he preysde hym to byde.
Men dreme al day of owles or of apes,
God woot it reweth me, and have good day!"
A lite er he was married, on a day . . .
That day that Ector sholde lese his lyf,
If thilke day he wente into bataille:
And eek it is ny day, I may nat dwelle;
For it was day, and eke his hennel alle;
Til it was passed undren of the day,
That thilke day was perious to thee;

Day—Continued

Why woltestow suffre hym on thy day to dye? . . .
As thilke day was maad upon the fox . . .
This mayde upon a day wente in the toun . . .
And so bifel soone after, on a day, . . .
Thus hath he falsly jugged the to day;
Wherefor I seye al day, as men may see, . . .
They daunce and playen at dees, bothe day and nyght, . . .
Honeste ynough to dryve the day away . . .
To-day, that we sholde han so fair a grace?
But trewely, by daye it may nat bee;
And but thou make a feeste on thilke day . . .
She wol nat dwelle in house half a day, . . .
But forth she wole, er any day be dawed,
Unto this day it dooth myn herte boote . . .
And ever shal, unto myn endyng day; . . .
Ther-after wol we crie al day and crave . . .
Lokynge out at his dore upon a day . . .
He hadde a book that gladly, nyght and day, . . .
And every nyght and day was his custume, . . .
After that day we hadden never debast . . .
That on a day cam, Jydunge for ryver, . . .
When that she saugh hir tyme upon a day; . . .
A twelf-month and a day, to seeche and leere . . .
The day was come that homward moete he tourne, . . .
Seyde he had holde his day as he hadde hight, . . .
That at the feeste was that ilke day; . . .
And al day after hilde hym as an owle, . . .
And so bifel that ones on a day . . .
Seyde this yeman; 'wiltow fer to day?' . . .
Another day if that I sholde yow seeche?' . . .
The day is short, and it is passed pryde, . . .
And yet ne wan I nothyng in this day; . . .
I have been syk, and that ful many a day;
And so bifel that on a day this fere . . .
He syngeth nat but o mase in a day . . .
'Deus hic!' quod he, 'O Thomas, freend, good day!' . . .
I have to day been at yowre chirche at messe, . . .
Yet saugh I nat this day so fair a wyf . . .
With empty wombe, fastynge many a day, . . .
In our chapitre praye we day and nyght . . .
And therefore preye I God, bothe day and nyght, . . .
Upon a day out ryden knyghtes two; . . .
Seyde on a day bitwene hem two right thus: . . .
I have be shryven this day at my curat; . . .
'I have,' quod he, 'had a despit this day,
This day bityd is to myn ordre and me; . . .
Biforn this day of swich a question. . . .
Unto my confessor to day he spak; . . .
He hath to day taught us so muchel good . . .
This day ne herd I of yowre tonge a word . . .
That flokmele on a day they to hym wente, . . .
Ben of that day when deeth shal on us falle . . .
But ther as ye han profred me this day . . .
That he wolde graunten hem a certeyn day . . .
He graunten hem a day, swich as hym leste, . . .
The day of wedding cam, but no wight kan . . .
The time of undren of the same day . . .
For wel she hadde herd seyde that thilke day . . .
And never ye to gruche it nyght ne day? . . .
Convoyed hire, and thus the day they spende . . .
And seyde thus: 'Grisilde,' quod he, 'that day
That day that maketh was oure mariage.' . . .
Departed of his norice, on a day . . .
For at day set he on his way is goon . . .
Fro day to day they ryden in hir way . . .
He on a day, in open audience, . . .
Another wyf, and crie day by day, . . .
The day that maketh was oure mariage!
Curseth the day and tyme that nature . . .
Thus hath this pitous day a blisful ende, . . .
This day in murthe and revel to dispende, . . .
In reste and pees after his fader day, . . .
He preveeth folk al day, it is no drede, . . .
That day and nyght he dooth al that he kan
After thy good, and hath doon many a day
And for his freendes on a day he sente,
As al day falleth alteracioun . . .
Ye han yowreself shewed heer to-day
Fro day to day gan in the soule impresse
For love is bynd al day, and may nat see . . .
But finally y-comen is the day . . .
Which carl biforn the knyght ful many a day.
Than hoonly foo al day in thy presence!
Thus abouteth he til that the day gan dawne,
Now day is come, I may no longer walke';
Heeld hire chambre unto the fourthe day, . . .
The moone, that at noon was thilke day, . . .
The fourthe day complet from noon to noon, . . .
As fresh as is the brighte someres day, . . .
Hath take swich impressioun that day, . . .
Ther lakketh noght, only but day and place . . .
And when she saugh hir tyme, upon a day, . . .
And in this wyse many a myrre day . . .
That ever was, for neither nyght ne day . . .
I prey to God that never dawne the day;
Bright was the day, and blew the firmament;
Therexperience so preveth every day
As he that hath a day or two y-seyn . . .

Day—Continued

This purpos and that day they iseen mente;
 But on a day wel armed, brighte and shene,
 The longe day, with spere sharpe y-grounde,
 Atte whiche day was taken Antenor.
 So that for harm that day the folk of Troye
 A-corsed be that day which that Nature
 'For al-so seur as day com'th after night,
 Ayeins hir wil, unpreyed, day and night,
 Why so mene I quod Pandarus al this day
 Wo worth that day, and namely that night,
 And cursed be that day which that Argive
 That ilke day I shal from you departe,
 But thorough my conseil this day finaly
 He was so fallen in despair that day,
 Knowe I ful wel that day is not for henne,
 Bywaylyng ay the day that they were borne
 That day by day, myn owne herte dere,
 'Ye sen that every day ek more and more
 And don my red withinne a day or tweye,
 And but ye come at day set into Troye,
 'I mene thus: that sin we mowe or day
 'For th'like day that I for cherishinge,
 That th'like day that ich untrew be
 The tenth day, but-if that deth m'assaille,
 I shal wel suffre unto the tenth day,
 Though that we ben a day or two a-twinne.
 To come ayein that day that I have hight.
 Another day shal torne us al to joye!
 Sin th'like day I saw her first with ye,
 The day gan rise, and Troilus him cladde,
 'Now hold your day, and do me not to deye!
 So for this forth, I preye you, day and night,
 Han many a day ben, alwey yit, parde,
 But this' eneeled til another day.
 And in this wise he nigh til day morneth.
 This Pandar,—that of al the day biforn
 'Sin day by day thou mayst thy-selfen see
 If thou thus lige a day or two or three,
 So sende us hastily the tenth day!
 He fedde hem day by day; that swich noblesse,
 Was nevere or that day wist at any feste.
 Nor ther n'as hour of al the day or night,
 The ferthe day, and thennes wolde he wende,
 The ferthe day to take of him our leve,
 On morwe, as sone as day bigan to clere,
 O paleis, whilom day that now art night,
 And thus he drof a day yit forth or tweye
 For-which ful ofte a day 'Allas' she seyde,
 Her limes lene, as she that al the day
 Ful ofte a day she sighte ek for distresse,
 Sin first that day her love bigan to springe:
 From him for whom she morneth night and day,
 It fil that after, on the tenth day
 He spak y-nough for oo day at the meste!
 And ye in armes bisy day by day:
 Yet preye I God so give you right good day
 The day go'th faste, and after that com'th eve,
 He thoughte he misauncount hadde his day,
 The thriddle, ferthe, fifte, sixte day
 So on a day he leyde him down to slepe:
 Ther every day with lif myself I shende.
 Fro day to day am I, and so mot dwelle,
 Fro day to day desiring evere more
 Y-wis, myn hertes day, my lady free,
 Yit preye I God so give you right good day!
 The day on which me clothen shal my grave:
 Encressen gan the two fro day to night
 And day by day he gan enquire and seche
 Fro day to day, til they ben bare of joye.
 But on a day to fighen he wende,
 Ful ofte a day he bad his herte breste.
 For which Criesyeu upon a day, for routha
 I stonde as now, that what yer or what day
 —Stood on a day in his malenolye
 The same day. And whan this Troilus
 'Tilunoven you a quarter of a day!
 I recche not how sone be the day!
 And dreddeles, his ire, day and night,
 So ofte a daye I mot thy werk renewe,
 The tenth day [dide] of Decembre;
 Of Decembre the tenth day,
 Metten with Venus that day,
 And al day seen hit yet in dede,
 As thus, lo, thou maist al day see
 The selve day right, or that houre
 And eek by day in every tyde
 That in my bed ther daweth me no day,
 The longe day thus walkyng in the grene.
 And I hadde romed, al the somerys day,
 That made me to ryse or it wer day,
 That in the brest was of the beste, that day,
 For on his day I chees you to be myne,
 In whiche me thought I myghte, day by day,
 The longe day I shoop me for to abide,
 The dayesie, or elles the ye of day,
 It nedyth nat al day thus for to endite.
 As other wrecches han don many a day,
 For she ne partheth, neither nyght ne day,
 Took eke his rede, and both upon a day,

Day—Continued

And thus the longe day in fight they spende,
 'Allas,' quod he, 'the day that I was borne!
 My worshippe in this day thus have I lorne!
 That never was waking in the day or nyght
 And every day this walle they wolde threete,
 Til on a day, whan Phobus gan to clere—
 'Allas,' quod he, 'the day that I was borne!
 The same day, withouten any faylle,
 Of Troye; and al the longe day they tweye
 So that withynne a day, or two or three,
 May not deserve hit in my lyes day,
